

History

To fully appreciate the Hooters brand today it's helpful to understand where it came from.

Self-proclaimed as “the happiest accident in restaurant history”, the concept was the result of its founders’ quest to find a restaurant where they could drink beer and never get kicked out. The conclusion was that the only sure path to success would be to build a place of their own.

No, we’re not kidding.

From the name inspired by one of comedian Steve Martin’s bits in 1980s to the wood interior, and even the Christmas lights—which were not a deliberate choice, but a holdover from one Christmas—the Hooters’ brand became distinct almost immediately.

The rest, as they say, is history.

Today the brand is owned by Hooters of America, LLC, but its original founders are still active with the concept and own and operate over twenty locations under a license agreement with HOA.

Of the over 430 locations worldwide, the Atlanta-based Hooters of America owns and operates 194. HOA is owned by HIG Capital.
